Columbia Sportswear has been a fixture in the Portland business market for more than 75 years. Starting from its roots as Columbia Hat Company in 1938, it's now a leader in the year-around outdoor apparel and footwear industry. The company's revenue now exceeds $2.3 billion, and it employs more than 6000 people globally. Columbia owns and manages, for strategic advantage, its distribution facilities and network in both North America and Europe. The Rivergate Distribution Center is the largest of Columbia's four distribution centers (the others are in Kentucky, Canada and France). It is a state-of-the-art facility using world class equipment, software and business processes to receive, store, pick, pack, and deliver more than 55,000,000 pieces of apparel a year.

This facility covers about 32 acres, the building is approximately 800,000 sq. ft., but because of multi-level mezzanine/racking has 1,500,000 sq. feet of storage space accessible to the workforce. The building can hold about 17,500,000 units of inventory at one time; each is tracked to a specific storage location by the systems. It has about 47,680 feet (approximately 9 miles) of conveyors, with 715 motors, 90 scanners, and 160 diverters; along with a sorter that processes 128 trays per minute with 256 pre-sort bins. The core staff running the base activity level of the facility is about 300 people, with a total of up to 700 people at the peak activity levels.
